PERSIST students present on community, social justice issues

Members of Berkeley City College’s PERSIST cohort gave final presentations which centered around semester-long social justice research projects. Groups presented their findings on AIDS and public health; domestic violence; homelessness and poverty; and how gangs effect community life.

As part of their class work, PERSIST students spend an entire semester researching, writing and reporting on issues which effect their communities.

Students’ projects center around their research findings. They work in small groups and select social justice-related areas of interest as project topics.

PERSIST began at Berkeley City College in 2008 as part of the Digital Bridge Academy Program.

Remember to pick up an Ornament from the Gift Tree in the 1st floor mail room. EOPS/CalWorks each year organizes a gift-giving event for the children of students who are part of both programs. For details, contact Ayele Lemma at alemma@peralta.edu.

Two Berkeley City College majors have been approved by the State Chancellor’s Office of the California Community Colleges. The majors, in the college’s Public and Human Services department, are: Certificates of Achievement and Associate in Arts Degrees in Community Health Worker and Community and Public Services.

Diego Navarro, nationally known educator and founder of the Academy for Excellence at Cabrillo College, will lead a workshop for 20+ BCC’s classified staff on Mon. & Tue., Dec. 12-13. Topics will include communication skills for effective collaboration, building leadership and planning skills. Staff will also have the opportunity to assess work relationships and better understand decision making processes that occur in the work place.
