Spring Semester Off to a Busy Start

Welcome back from the winter break!

In December, Peralta’s Board of Trustees voted unanimously to reject all three finalists, chosen from a pool of ten, for the position of chancellor. The board members had hoped to have a permanent chancellor to begin our next academic year, July 1, 2011, but that goal doesn’t seem possible given the time frame necessary to conduct a nation wide search for such a high level academic leader. Long-time administrator Wise Allen will likely continue as interim chancellor until a permanent chancellor is selected.

Admissions and Records offices throughout the Peralta district have changed their schedules. Beginning January 10 the offices started their new schedules. BCC’s schedule is now:
Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday: 8:00 am to 4:30 pm;
Wednesday: 8:00 am to 7:00 pm;
Friday: 8:00 am to 1:00 pm;
Closed on Saturday and Sunday.

The hours for all Peralta admissions offices can be found on page 6 of the Peralta spring 2011 class schedule book. The website will be updated soon.

David Johnson, director of the PACE program and African-American Studies and History instructor, has left BCC to take a job as dean of social sciences at Cañada College, part of the San Mateo Community College District.

Certified Deaf Interpreters

By Priscilla Moyers. Priscilla Moyers is a certified deaf interpreter with a bachelor’s degree in English literature and English as a Second Language. She is the incoming president of the Northern California Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf (NorCRID) and has been involved in interpreting since the 1980s.

The average person who has seen sign language interpreters working usually assumes that all interpreters would have to be hearing people, but there is a growing need for sign language interpreters who are Deaf or hard of hearing.

These interpreters are known as Deaf interpreters, specialists who provide interpreting services, “most commonly between a signed language and other visual and tactual communication forms used by individuals who are Deaf, hard of hearing or Deaf-Blind,” as noted by the National Consortium of Interpreter Education Centers. They also translate between written texts and signed language and interpret between two signed languages.

The need for Deaf interpreters stems from the fact that not all Deaf people in the United States use standard American Sign Language. Deaf people are not a homogeneous group, and there are many factors that can affect their use of ASL, including the fact that 90 percent of Deaf people have hearing parents and their acquisition of ASL can be delayed.

Plus, Deaf people come from different racial, ethnic, geographical, economic and educational backgrounds. Some are born in other countries, where they may have learned a different form of visual language, and some born in the U.S. may have been isolated and did not have the opportunity to learn ASL. And just like the hearing population, some Deaf people have cognitive disabilities, brain injury, or mental health issues that preclude them from learning language well.

A Deaf interpreter has the training and skills to recognize nuances in language that a hearing interpreter may overlook. Deaf interpreters have native or native-like fluency in ASL and/or another signed language, as well as familiarity with a wide variety of other communication forms used by Deaf people from their lifelong interactions with Deaf people from all walks of life. They have also had early experiences interpreting for friends, family and peers.

In addition, they have personally experienced challenges in comprehending situations, interpreters and various communication styles, as well as experiences of discrimination, oppression and frustration due to a lack of access to communication and information. These life events have given Deaf interpreters both the linguistic and extra-linguistic knowledge that is rarely, if ever, found in hearing interpreters.

The title of Certified Deaf Interpreter, or CDI, indicates that the Deaf or hard-of-hearing person has passed the certification test offered by the Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf. To pass the test, an individual must have excellent communication skills and have had interpreter training. In addition, “the CDI may also have specialized training and/or experience in use of gesture, mime, props, drawings and other tools to enhance communication,” according to RID (www.rid.org).

Benefits of Utilizing Certified Deaf Interpreter

RID’s definition of certified deaf interpreters only begins to address the value of using CDIs as members of a full team of interpreters. I was involved with a Deaf interpreting think tank funded with a five-year grant from the National Consortium of Interpreter Education Center (http://diinstitute.org/). Drawing from our own experiences as interpreters and interpreter trainers, we came up with ideas on how we can best advocate for training and hiring Deaf interpreters. We also brainstormed about why CDIs are vital to the communication process and necessary to ensure accurate interpretation.

CDIs are trained to adjust their communication styles to match the broad range of sign languages used by Deaf consumers. They are adept and flexible in working across a range of registers, genres and variations of ASL, and in some cases another signed language. They have the ability to recognize and negotiate cultural behaviors, values, mores and discourse features and styles for effective communication, including the ability to recognize educational, cognitive, physiological and sociolinguistic factors and communication needs that will affect the interpreting session. They also are skilled in the use of alternative visual communication strategies to convey complex concepts to consumers, including drawing, mime, props, etc.

Settings Where Certified Deaf Interpreters Are Required

Anytime accurate communication is vital, full interpreting teams made up of Deaf and hearing interpreters should be used. This obviously includes any legal situation. CDIs and hearing interpreters on the legal team need legal training and knowledge prior to working in this area. Without a full team of trained and certified interpreters, an innocent person may be convicted or a guilty person exonerated. Best practice dictates using a full team anytime law enforcement is involved.

Mental health settings also require a full team to accurately interpret between Deaf patients and mental health providers. CDIs in medical settings help ensure patients understand the implications of treatment and medicines, as well as allowing patients to communicate information to their doctors. Using a full team can reduce any errors in diagnosis.

CDIs are mandatory anytime Deaf juveniles are involved in legal, medical or mental health situations. Most Deaf youth have a very limited understanding of legal and medical issues, terminology and ramifications. In addition, youth often have poor language skills, use regional slang or “slur” their signs. No hearing interpreter should accept legal or mental health assignments without demanding a full team.

Other settings that benefit from having CDIs interpret are Deaf-blind interpreting and interpreting on stage (other than theatrical performances), also known as platform interpreting.

Advocating for Certified Deaf Interpreters

Although hearing interpreters can possess good skills in both English and ASL, most have not had the opportunity to interact with a broad range of Deaf people, whereas CDIs have skills that surpass most hearing interpreters in recognizing nuance and language use quicker and more accurately in Deaf consumers.

Working as part of a full team benefits the hearing interpreter in many ways. For one, hearing interpreters learn how to manipulate ASL by watching CDIs work, and they can feel more confident that the interpretation is accurate and complete. In addition, working with CDIs helps ensure that Deaf consumers’ rights are not being violated.

Unfortunately, hearing interpreters may not have been trained on how to request a full team for assignments, know that they can, or, worse, a hearing interpreter will notify an agency that a CDI is needed but is instead replaced with an interpreter who doesn’t realize the importance of using a CDI for linguistic accuracy.

Using a CDI does not mean the hearing interpreter has poor interpreting skills, rather it is the opposite. The hearing interpreters that I team with have very good skills, but they understand that as hearing people, they have limitations. They realize that complete and accurate communication is the goal for all interpretation, and the best way to ensure effective communication is by using a full team. For less-experienced interpreters, using a CDI is great for exposure to language and to help the interpreter feel good about the interpretation.

Imagine if school districts hired CDIs as part of a full team to interpret for students. The language modeling would be incredible.

I realize that it would cost more money to send a full team of interpreters to assignments, yet the benefits outweigh the costs. We need to educate agencies and institutions about the benefits of using a CDI which, according to RID, include: “… optimal understanding by all parties; efficient use of time and resources; clarification of linguistic and/or cultural confusion and misunderstanding(s); and arrival at a clear conclusion in the interpreting situation.”

So, let’s work together to ensure Deaf consumers have the best team of interpreters possible. The more we teach about the importance of full teams, the better off the Deaf community will be.

Beating Test Anxiety

By Nina C. Kindblad. Kindblad is a Learning Disabilities Specialist at BCC.

You’re sweating, dizzy, sick to your stomach—oh no, what could it be? Yep, it’s the dreaded day! You have a test or a presentation to face, and your anxiety is kicking in big time. Many of us suffer from test anxiety, but it doesn’t have to control us; we can learn to control it.

Test anxiety can cause distraction and mental blocks. This is the last thing we need when taking a test — we need our brains to be clear and functioning at their best.

Often the cause of anxiety over assignments, quizzes, tests, or presentations is a fear of failure. We feel that if we do poorly, we ourselves are failures.

Remember, it is only one test or assignment, and you don’t need to put your whole future on it. You need to believe in yourself and learn some “positive self talk.” Tell yourself that you will be successful; picture yourself walking into the classroom and giving your presentation or taking your exam and doing great. Here are a few strategies that may help:

• Know your material. If it’s a presentation, practice, practice, practice! Have a friend be your audience and give you feedback. If it is a test or quiz, start preparing weeks in advance by reviewing material daily.

• Attend all classes. Skipping classes can add to your anxiety since so much is learned during class time.
• Make sure you get enough sleep the night before so you feel well-rested.
• Start your exam or presentation with positive self talk: picture yourself succeeding and tell yourself you did study, are prepared, and you are going to do your best.
• If your mind becomes blocked, close your eyes and take a long, deep breath. Let it out slowly. Concentrate on your breathing — actually feel or hear yourself breathe.
• If you still feel anxious and stressed, just write down or say anything you remember about the subject. Remember, it is only one test/assignment and it is unlikely that it will “make or break” your chances of passing the class.

College District. He will be replaced as PACE director by BCC faculty member Nola Hadley Torres. Hadley Torres was previously the PACE director from 2003-2006. She also teaches History, including the classes focused on Native Americans.

During their November food/funds drive, BCC’s Civic Engagement Club raised $240 in donations and collected 250 food items for the Alameda County Food Bank. Thanks to all students and employees who contributed!

In the fall newsletter we noted in the newsletter that several positions at the college had been cut as a cost saving measure. Two of those positions were our deans of instruction. The college has been able to redirect the money that would have otherwise been spent on their salaries for other needed services, however, going without both deans was not intended to be a long-term solution. The college hoped to fill one of those positions in time for the spring 2011 semester. As of this writing, hiring a new dean of instruction was in the final stages. The college is waiting approval of the top finalist by the chancellor and board of trustees.

Community college students who graduate with a “C” average or better (a 2.0 GPA) will be guaranteed admission to a California State University as juniors beginning fall 2011 under the bill SB 1440 signed by Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger before his term expired.

Under the new law, California’s public community colleges also will be required to offer associate degrees comprised only of courses acceptable for transfer. Students only need 60 units to graduate, but often students at two-year schools are confused about what classes are transferable and end up completing an average of 80 units, many of them non-transferable.
Jerry L. Adams Scholarship Available from the Berkeley Community Fund

CSD Providing Computers, High Speed Connections to Deaf Community at Reduced Cost

In July, Communication Services for the Deaf, Inc. (CSD), a private nonprofit agency dedicated to providing quality services; ensuring public accessibility; and increasing awareness of issues affecting the deaf, hard of hearing and individuals with speech disabilities, received an award of $14.9 million in grant money from the National Telecommunications and Information Agency as part of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. This grant enabled CSD to implement a nationwide initiative to provide a discounted Dell notebook computer, high-speed Internet access, and life-skills training, for low-income, underserved deaf and hard of hearing people. CSD has named this two-year campaign Project Endeavor.

Project Endeavor offers a video-configured Dell 11z notebook, which comes with a mobile broadband card, for $230. The retail price of the notebook is $500, meaning consumers save over 50 percent to start with. Along with that consumers can receive a 12-month 3G/4G wireless Internet access plan at no additional cost. The 12-month coverage is a $700 savings to the consumer, if not more, depending on where they live in the United States. The notebook is theirs to keep even after the two-year project reaches completion.

CSD pursued these funds because as the nation’s largest deaf and hard of hearing service organization, it understood that many deaf and hard of hearing Americans simply don’t have the same level of access to broadband/high-speed Internet services in their homes (or mobile) as their hearing counterparts. In some cases, deaf and hard of hearing people do not have the same financial resources; generally speaking, the deaf and hard of hearing community are more economically disadvantaged than the mainstream hearing community. With the 3G/4G wireless plan provided by Project Endeavor, consumers will have access not just in their homes, but everywhere they take their notebook computer.

“Over the past 35 years, CSD’s has continually operated with the concept of creating new channels of access for deaf and hard of hearing people — to fill those communication gaps hearing Americans rarely experience and quite possibly, do not understand,” said Ben Soukup, CSD chief executive officer. “From being able to stream or download the news, to honing job seeking skills, to using a videophone to keep up with family and friends … Project Endeavor achieves all of this, and so much more. CSD is proud to offer this unique and solely deaf and hard of hearing-centered program to our consumers.”

Deaf and hard of hearing consumers, who can verify a bilateral hearing loss of 40db or greater, are encouraged to call the Project Endeavor contact center today. The contact center can be reached in a number of ways, depending on the consumer’s preferred mode of communication. The contact numbers are 877-NETME77 (voice), 877-403-4596 (TTY), 605-550-4056 or 605-644-7399 (VP), and 605-782-8446 (FAX). The contact center can also be reached via e-mail at info@projectendeavor.com.

Library of Congress Preserves a Piece of Deaf History

At the end of December the Library of Congress announced its annual list of films to be inducted into the National Film Registry of the Library of Congress. “The Preservation of Sign Language” is among the films. Under the terms of the National Film Preservation Act, the Librarian of Congress names 25 films to the film registry that are “culturally, historically or aesthetically” significant, worthy of preservation forever. As noted by the Library of Congress announcement, “the films are not selected as the ‘best’ American films of all time, but rather as works of enduring significance to American culture.” More than 2,112 films were nominated in 2010.

“The Preservation of Sign Language” was produced by the National Association of the Deaf in 1913 and features a signed presentation by George Veditz. It was part of a series of 13 films produced between 1910 and 1920 designed to record American Sign Language to preserve it for the future. Leaders in the Deaf community believed that the growing influence of “oralists within the field of deaf education would lead to the eradication of sign language in schools for the deaf.”

The famous Veditz quote “As long as we have deaf people on earth, we will have signs,” is from this film. In it he goes on to say, “As long as these films exist we shall preserve our beautiful language in its purity. It is my hope that we will all love and guard our beautiful sign language as the noblest gift God has given to deaf people.”

All the films in the series, including one featuring Edward Minor Gallaudet, Gallaudet University’s first president, were given to the university and the Library of Congress in the 1940s.

With the addition of the 25 films for 2010, the total number of films in the registry is now 550. Founded in 1880, the Library of Congress is the nation’s oldest federal cultural institution. Many of the library’s resources can be accessed through its website at www.loc.gov.
